Len Goodman, Santa Fe, NM

The New Mexico Medical Cannabis Program made it possible for Len and his doctor to modify his treatment plan. Today, Len needs no pharmaceuticals and lives a happy, healthy life.

After 13 years on prescriptions, which included benzodiazepines and anti-depressant pharmaceutical cocktails, my primary care physician suggested I try cannabis. I found medical cannabis is far more effective for my depression, anxiety and improves my general sense of well-being.

It is now seven years since I’ve used pharmaceuticals for my PTSD. Medical cannabis is my sole medication for this condition - no more harmful adverse side effects, no more addiction.

I take fewer prescription drugs and my doctor visits have gone down from almost seven per week to, often, less than one.

This has been enormously positive & has meant huge economic relief for both me and my insurance companies, including Medicare.

I am no longer forced to rely as much on narcotics because I have an alternative tool: The Medical Cannabis Program.

Have you ever been in so much pain that you couldn’t fall asleep?

After his prescription drugs stopped working, that is what Joel experienced every night for years. Luckily, Joel lives in New Mexico and he was able to find an alternative for his constant severe pain caused by MS.

Joel enrolled in the Medical Cannabis Program in 2008. Medical cannabis allowed him to regain control of his pain and his life. Today, Joel is once again able to work full-time to provide for his family.

I was diagnosed with multiple sclerosis twenty-four years ago. My doctors prescribed a variety of medications, including narcotics, to help me cope, and manage the symptoms. But a few years ago, the medications stopped working for me and the intolerable pain returned.

Exhausted, frustrated and unable to find relief, I finally decided to try cannabis. It worked. It eased the pain, and I could finally get to sleep.
